This is a message from the Randall Corporation, bringing you a better future. Our company is looking for people worthy of a new world to entrust with our future. How would you like to work with the Randall Corporation to create a new future? We're waiting for you!

Notes:

Based on the music and vocal effects, this appears to be a commercial It sounds vaguely familiar, so it could be a real commercial Still, the broadcast has been silent for a long time now Some individual must have used this frequency to broadcast just this one commercial.

Maybe it's some sort of signal or code. Or maybe the Randall Corporation really is looking for people even now.

- Frequency: 1242 kHz
- Number of times received: 11
- Time: Around 5 P.M.
- Broadcaster: Young woman

...Hey, hey, is anyone listening? This is Megurigaoka One-One-One Broadcasting. All you people still here at the end of the world, you okay!? Those of you who can't hear me, answer me! Say yeah..! You're not really getting into this, are you? Oh well! Let's start the One-One-One broadcast!

Notes:

Given the contents of the broadcast, I believe she's living alone. However, the broadcast continues for several days, and she does not appear to have left her home to look for food. I suspect she most likely lives in an emergency shelter like this one. The address that she mentions several times during the broadcast is for a private domicile. So that means there are emergency shelters in private domiciles.

It's the same here, but maybe they knew something like this was going to happen ahead of time, so there are shelters in various places. That is a reassuring thought, but at the same time, it makes me wonder why someone would prepare them in the first place. We can't get in touch with her from here, but I do pray that she continues to broadcast.

- Frequency: 76.1 kHz
- Number of times received: 3
- Time: Around 5 P.M.
- Broadcaster: Female. High school student?

...This is K...Can you hear me? I'm at the north entrance to the Megurigaoka Station. The north entrance stationmaster's office. I've hurt my leg. I don't think I've been bitten, but I can't really move. It really hurts. I don't think I can make it outside by myself. If anyone can hear me—if anyone's there—please come. I don't have much water, so I don't think I can last too long. Oh, and there's someone waiting on the top floor of the mall by the station too. Head over there too, if you like.

Notes:

This repeated three times an hour apart, with more or less the same message. Given the contents, I believe she used the broadcasting equipment in the stationmaster's office. I listened on this frequency for another message the next day, but it never resumed.

- Frequency: 1242 kHz
- Number of times received: 5
- Time: 2 P.M. every day
- Broadcaster: Middle-aged man

You must not fear them. They are the future. They are the Cloud. Do you understand the Cloud? It's when data spreads thin, so thin, and far across a network. Man's heart is data as well, so it can spread thin, so thin, and far as well.

To them, the heart cannot be contained in just a single body. They are spread thin and far throughout all of them. Let us welcome them. Let us welcome the Cloud. There are clouds in Heaven, and that is the Cloud. Let us join with them, become the Cloud, and go to Heaven

Notes:

The message is the same, but changes in the voice could indicate a live broadcast. Perhaps the broadcaster achieved his transformation, as his message suggests. This is a tempting hypothesis, but I still don't have much proof, and trying to test it would likely be far too risky.

- Frequency: 76.4 kHz
- Number of times received: 1
- Time: 11 A.M.
- Broadcaster: Unknown

Notes:

Music played for around seventeen minutes. I don't know much about music, but it was most likely a violin. It was a bright, up-tempo song, possibly jazz.

Given the echo and the sound of wind, I believe this was an outdoor performance. Partway through, I could hear their voices growing closer, and then the performance ended. I could hear the instrument being put away and footsteps, and then the broadcast ended completely. Not a single word was spoken, from start to finish. Perhaps it was a live outdoor performance. But still, who did it, and why? I would like to hear that song again.

- Frequency: 954 kHz
- Number of times received: Almost every day
- Time: Noon, 5 P.M.
- Broadcaster: Adult woman

This is an emergency broadcast. Currently...the garrison has opened its doors and is offering shelter to those nearby. Should you find it difficult to approach the front gate, calm down and put up a flag or something that will be noticeable to indicate where you are. Once we confirm your location, we will dispatch a rescue team. We have emergency stores such as food and medicine. It is safe here. Please, just calm down and head for the garrison.

Notes:

The message sounds the same every day, so I believe it is a recording. There has been some noise in the message lately I believe this is due to changes in the terrain or weather, or possibly degradation of the broadcasting equipment

Given everything, I believe it would be difficult to keep up relief efforts and shelter such as those detailed in the message. There is a chance they left emergency stores behind And weapons.

NOTE BOOK

Record of Received Transmissions

Vol. 29

We experience all sorts of fun and painful things in the many years that we spend in school, but there is also a sort of stability in it. This is because, deep down inside, we all know exactly what our places are.

Leaving school means losing that stability as well. It may not all be fun, but it isn't all bad either. Thinking, "This is the sort of person I am," can sometimes also be the very cage that traps us. It isn't so bad to just smash that thought to smithereens and reexamine everything.

Yuki and the gang have graduated, and now that same time has come for them. The members of the School Living Club are changing little by little, so please do keep up your expectations of them. And if you could stay excited about the anime as well, along with its gradual deviation from the original story, that would be appreciated!

Thank you.
